"In conclusion, gentlemen, let me assure you, that be my abode hereafter where it may—whether fortuneshall direct my footsteps to the emporium of the Celestial Empire, or to a solitary hovel beyond the Rocky mountains—fond memory, faithful to her trust, will linger around your happy domicils, and gather flowers, from which balm for my future grief shall be distilled. 'Oft, oft, in the stilly night's shall I think of your innocent pleasures and pastimes—the enchantments of your luxurious evening banquets—and the 'feast of reason and flow of soul' at your dinners. My prayers henceforth and forever shall be for the continued happiness and lengthened lives of you and of yours; and although I cannot take my departure without a slight ray of hope that we shall meet again—be that meeting ever so transient—yet, should the will of Heaven be adverse to the consummation of my desires, in this, as in all other matters—be that well done.

EDITOR'S CORRESPONDENCE

[From our regular correspondent.]
NEW YORK, September 16, 1845.

(From our regular correspondent.)

New Yoak, September 16, 1845.

Unless we desire to make general statistical tables of great accuracy, for preservation in the archives of the country, it is best, for the casual reader, to state results in round numbers, which leave a more tangible impression on the mind. Figures thus stated are longer temembered. This method I shall adopt in giving the importation of woollen goods of all descriptions into the United States, from the year 1823 to 1840. A striking peculiarity connected with this trade, is the fluctuation it has exhibited within the period stated, both in the quantity and description of goods, as well as in their value. The largest importations took place in 1836, when they amounted to about $19,000,000. The lowest importations were made in 1826 and in 1837, when they only reached $7,800,000 in the former year, and $7,700,000 in the latter year.

The classification of imported woollen goods might be made more clear, were the quantities of cassimeres and cloths separately stated. Of the different kinds of woollens, such as flannels, hosiery, worsted, &c., cloths and cassimeres imported form much the largest bulk, both in quantity and value. Flannels and blankets are the next most important articles. The average importation of cloths and cassimeres during the 17 years noticed, was from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 of yards, each year. In 1836, there were about 8,900,000 yards imported, which in 1840 fell off about 4,500,000 yards.

The value of imported woollens of every description, for seventeen years, was in each year as follows:

WS:
In	1823$7,700,000
In	18248,080,000
In	182510,800,000
In	1826
In	1827 8,200,000
In	1828
In	1829
In	18305,500,000
In	183112,700,000
	1001
In	18329,400,000
In	183312,800,000
In	183411,247,000
In	183516,900,000
In	183619,900,000
In	18377,700,000
În
	183811,060
In	183917,500
In	18408,600,000

importations in woollens (as in everything else) were in 1836, the year of the greatest bank issues, expansion, and overtrading; beginning with the United States Bank, and going down to the most remote "wild-cat" and "coon-skin "paper machines," and "shin-plaster shops" of the West. May we never have such another era of "rag-paper" insanity!

As wool will very likely soon form an important item in our foreign exports, it would be well for the Secretary of the Treasury to order more definite tables to be kept of the exportation of wool, distinguishing domestic from foreign wool, and pure wool from other produce of sheep. As the tables are now kept, it is impossible for any one to arrive at a knowledge of the exact amount of domestic wool sent off; for the whole is included under the sneeping head "of the yeact amount of domestic wool sent off; for the whole is included under the sneeping head "of the yeact amount of domestic wools, exc.; in fact, the entire animal.

We have fresh news from the ship Southport, ashore at Barnegat. It is believed the vessel will be a complete loss. She is owned by Messra. George Bulkley & Co., and belonged to the New York and Charleston line of packets.

The New York papers are engaged in discussing the case of Mr. Gough, about whom Madame Rumor, with her thousand tongues, has been very busy of late.

An old lady (Mrs. Miller) died some days since in Orchard street. A niece, residing with her, shut herself in a room with the corpse, and remained in it four days, only being released by the forcible entry of officers. The niece was found to be deranged, and was sent to Bellevue hospital.

We have accounts of a severe gale at Quebec, and in the St. Lawrence river, which must be set down to the credit of the autumnal equinox.

Mr. Kurtz, of the city police, has made an extensive seizure of gunpowder on board of a schooner at the foot of Beekman street, shipped contrary to law.
